The German Yearbook of International Law is an international law periodical that is not only dedicated to the publication of cutting-edge scholarship. As the German Yearbook, it has also provided an international audience with reports on German practice in international law for more than seven decades now. However, German contributions to international law are not solely limited to practice.

In 2018, to draw attention to German scholarship in international law beyond the occasional book review, and to support young scholars from Germany, the Editors decided to launch a new section: 'Outstanding Theses'. This section is intended to provide a forum in which authors of excellent doctoral or post-doctoral dissertations on international and European law from German universities can present their theses to a wider international audience. We trust that this platform will foster interest in the monographs presented, as well as the vibrant scene of up-and-coming legal scholarship from Germany!
